ARGUS OUTPOINTED AN INSECT THAT IS CREDITED WITH THE CITY OF

Scientists Have Made Some Wonderful Dis- NEWARK coveries In This Line, but They Give the Palm to the Common Dragon Fly-Interesting Natural History.

Thirty-six thousand eyes in one head! This may appear a little like exaggeraion, but it is a fact. Science, backed by le microscope, says so, and science never stretches the truth. Should it do so it would cease to be a science. Argus was fabled to have a hundred eyes, but Argus would be a very insigificant curiosity compared with the latest discovery in the insect kingdom. There are numbers of insects with 100 and even 500 eyes, but when the numher of optics allotted to a single insect eaches up into the thousands the idea

Naturalists have recently been engagd in the study of this most interesting subject. Each succeeding day brings nore marvelous results until the astounding discovery has been made that the common dragon fly, or mosquito hawk, while seemingly possessed of only two visual organs, really has as Superb Diamonds many as 36,000, each of the two visible to the ordinary observer being subdivided into 18,000 separate lenses, each eyelet having a distinct nerve connecting it with the brain and acting entirely independently of its myriads of com-

The theory most generally adopted by scientists is that, while far superior to the eye of higher animal life as regards moving objects, the power of observation of the contracte evens inferior in its application to dationary things. The reason is this: The moving object is first observed by end of the thousands of facets, which perecives it for the infinitesimal part of a second that it takes to get out of the are of vision of that particular lens and pass into that of another, each movement being separately duty. But with a stationary object it is different, since for some reason the and so render the object less distinct

A question which continues to puzzle insect sees as many images of the objects as he has eyes, or facets. For instance, does the dragon fly fancy he is flitting over 36,000 pends, or does he see only one? Probably one, for the two eyes of a human being in normal condition show the lenses and cones in front, the eye is a hollow sphere pierced by perforations running down the facets toward the center. It follows that the light impressions thus form a single picture, or moslightly different picture from its neighbor and the group presenting a perfect

There are many other animals posessed of an extraordinary number of eves. James Francis Stevens, a noted afternoon, while Francis Pascoe, another noted naturalist, counted 80 different specimens on his library window. The common scallep, for instance, has 593 Broad Street., many eyes scattered irregularly over its body. The lobster has massed together tinot eyes, and, unlike human eyes, sunk inward. Does the poor lobster see things a hundredfold? If so, possibly it in avoiding the 99 imaginary lobster The common house fly has 4,000 eyes, the cabbage butterfly 17,000, the drone fly 8,000, the honeybee 6,300. But still Rould. quite hawk, or dragon fly, with his 36,000. As his name suggests, while not despising any of the smaller insects, his specialty is the mosquito. Indeed he has so succeeded in terrorizing these little pests that his lifeless form still fills them with alarm. In localities where mosquitoes are troublesome an effectual mode of ridding the place of them consists in suspending a dead dragon fly from the ceiling by a piece of thread.

never been known to fail. Up to a certain point these multitudinous eyes may be compared to windows fitted with innumerable panes of glass. The panes, however, are of different forms. Some, like those of the bee and the ant, are six sided, remind-ing us of the pattern so common in Gothie architecture. Some, again, are diamond shaped and others square. Another interesting branch of this ineresting subject is the study of the near and far sighted insects. Johanna Muller long ago pointed out that the flight of insects depends upon their power of vision. This will account for the differfly and the wasp. The one confines him-self to short flights. As his food is always to be found within a small area, the flies in short curves and circles. But the wasp is remarkably sharp sighted, and the arrangement of the lenses shows that his line of vision is decidedly forward. Here, again, the dragon fly is pre-eminent. He has well been called the tyrant of the air. He alone is able to take perfectly straight lines at enormous speed for long distances, evidently seeing well what is ahead of him. - New Orleans Times-Democrat.
